I demanded, holding the letter to the side to interrogate the imposter. He audibly released a breath, stepping forward again and indicated the name at the bottom of the note - Killian. Doubtful. I glanced at the name, then looked again to the cloaked man, who still stared at the letter. Yeah, I saw that, I informed him, And you are? No response. He grabbed the ransom note out of my hands and continued to stare at it as if he hadn t seen it before. And now I m to presume that you re an innocent? I inquired impatiently. He shrugged again, then turned and walked back down the path from whence he came. Hey! I called, hastily pursuing him. He took off at a run, dropping the letter on the ground. HEY! I yelled again and raced after him. Killian: I watched as Kevin ran after Fu s private messenger, then strode forward through the main-gate entrance, halting in front of the nearest guard, who fortunately had not noticed the commotion. See...
