COMMENTS ON THE PATHOLOGY AND BACTERIOLOGY OF FATAL INFLUENZA CASES, AS OBSERVED AT CAMP DEVENS, MASS (CLASSIC REPRINT) (PAPERBACK)

Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Comments on the Pathology and Bacteriology of Fatal Influenza Cases, as Observed at Camp Devens, Mass In a series such as is presented here two types of lungs stand out as strikingly characteristic findings in this disease. The first is encountered in those cases in which death has occurred within a few days after the onset of pulmonary signs. These cases yield lungs which are partially collapsed, dark red, lax, but meaty in consistency. The pleural surfaces are often partly covered with a dusky red mottling, due to small extravasations of blood beneath the serous coat. There may be a thin layer of dusky red fibrinous exudate upon the pleural surfaces, particularly over the posterior borders. On section these lungs are dark red and wet. They are dripping wet, and the fluid from some portions is a blood-tinged serous liquid and from others dark red and bloody. On close inspection the cut surfaces are usually found to be thickly sprinkled with air vesicles of considerable size. The lung tissue as a whole, after the liquid has drained from it, is brownish-red in color, and somewhat translucent and friable. The mucosa of the bronchi[104] is usually very dark red in color, and the bronchial lymph nodes are enlarged and deep red in color.
