Excerpt: . viii the ruins of the muristan and the mosques of omar and el aksa The ruins in the foreground mark where stood the fine Hospice of the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, a building of great magnificence, erected 1120 A.d. The Order was founded on the establishment of the Christian kingdom in Jerusalem, and in close connection with it was the Abbey of St. Marie la Grande, where female pilgrims were entertained and housed by the sisterhood. A few years ago these ruins were all covered with rubbish. The Sultan gave the site to the Prussian Government; but he had also given it to the French! Neither power seemed to care much about it until after the French defeat at Sedan. The French agent on the spot then determined to take possession of it, and one fine morning he, with official cavass and flag, went off to erect that flag, and so claim the land and ruins as French. On arriving he found the German flag just planted! It had been erected by the late Emperor Frederick of Germany, then Crown Prince. With one of the most talented of the explorers for the Palestine Exploration Fund we often went to the Muristan when the Germans had commenced their excavations. The large area is bounded by Christian Street and David Street. It is 170 yards east and west, 150 north and south. The hospitallers who erected the building were military monks, and there...
